The repair kit for a mileage figure that went onto the paperwork wrong. Four blocks, and it is built as a matched pair: the seller states what the reading actually was and why the documents say otherwise, and the buyer states the same thing from their side. A clerk who has spotted two different numbers will not move the transaction until both halves arrive.

This sheet is not the form. Download the blank RV-F1310801 from the Tennessee Department of Revenue at <https://www.tn.gov/content/dam/tn/revenue/documents/forms/titlereg/f1310801Fill-in.pdf> — always take the current revision from the agency rather than a copy. Print this and keep it beside you while you complete theirs.

Every line, in the order you meet it

1	YOU	This is to certify that on _____, I, _____	The date of the sale and your name, opening the sentence that runs across the first block. Watch out: The date here is the date of the transfer, not today. The signature line further down carries today's date, and the two being different is normal on this form.
2	YOU	The vehicle, and who you sold it to	Vehicle identification number, make, model and year on one rule, and the buyer's name on the next. Watch out: Copy the VIN from the title, not from this form's twin at the bottom of the page. The two blocks are filled in by different people and the clerk reads them against each other.
3	YOU	The reading, and the reason	What the odometer actually showed at the handover, then a plain explanation of why the paperwork says something else. Watch out: Be specific and be dull. Digits transposed, a five read as a six, the reading copied from the previous year's inspection - a clerk is looking for a story that accounts for the exact difference between the two numbers.
4	YOU	Sign under the federal warning	Signature, printed name and date, directly under the paragraph about civil damages and criminal penalties. Watch out: Read the paragraph. This is a sworn statement about mileage under a federal statute, which is a different order of thing from a clerical correction.
5	BUYER	The purchaser's mirror image	Blocks C and D: what they bought, from whom, on what date, what the reading was, and the same explanation. Watch out: They fill this in themselves. A seller who completes both halves has produced two statements in one handwriting, which is the opposite of what the form is for.
6	YOU	The notice at the foot	Two sentences: every owner since the discrepancy has to certify, and an attorney-in-fact cannot do it for anybody. Watch out: If the car has been sold on again since the error, this becomes a chain of statements rather than a pair, and it is worth ringing the clerk before you start collecting signatures.

What gets this one rejected

- Only one half completed. The form is two mirrored statements and a clerk needs both of them.
- Signed by an attorney-in-fact. The notice at the foot rules that out in a single sentence, whatever the power of attorney says.
- A reason that is not a reason. Transposed digits, a reading taken from the trip meter, a figure copied off an old inspection - those are explanations. Left blank, or filled with the word error, is not.
- A new reading that still does not match the title. This form explains the mismatch; it does not authorise a third number.
- Used to walk back a ticked discrepancy box. If statement 3 was checked on the disclosure, the brand is on the record and this form does not lift it.
- Missing an owner. Where the car changed hands more than once since the mistake, the notice asks for a certification from all owners involved since it happened.

☐ Amber is what you write ☐ Grey is a block somebody else completes The filled-in example is at the start of this sheet.
